

"Rick, please take a hat with you," said Mom. "I do not want you to get burned from the sun." Rick grabbed his hat and some suntan lotion.

Pop, his grandfather, had called Rick that morning. He had asked Rick whether he wanted to go to the farm. Rick had said that he would like to go, and Pop was on his way over to pick up Rick.

It took an hour to drive out to the farm. The farm was far out in the country. On the way there, Rick and Pop talked. Pop had been to the doctor for a checkup. The doctor had said he was in great shape. Rick talked to Pop about school. Rick had made an A on a test. Pop was very happy for Rick.

Soon they were at the farm. The farm had many trees and fields. Pop had a garden there and he grew food to eat. He had rows of peppers and lettuce. He had another row of watermelons. Rick loved the watermelons. He took one to the creek and put it into the water to get cold. They would eat it later.

Rick and Pop watered all of the plants in the garden. It took a long time and Rick got hot. After they had watered the plants, they stopped to rest and eat lunch. Pop had made them some peanut butter and jelly sandwiches. He had used grape jelly which Rick loved. Pop had two cokes and some chips, too. The cokes were good and cold. For dessert, the two ate slices of cake that Mom had made for them. It was the best lunch that Rick had ever eaten.

After lunch the two picked the food they wanted from the garden. They would take some back to Mom and Dad, too. They put the food into the trunk of Pop's car. Then they walked down to the creek. They found the watermelon and cut it open. It was very cold and juicy. Rick ate as much as he could. He was still full from lunch.

Pop cleaned up and then they started for home. Rick was a little bit sleepy and he took a nap. When they got home, Rick hugged Pop good-bye. He thanked Pop for taking him to the farm.
